Be memorable. Whether you like it or loathe it, public speaking is something many of us have to do. Be it presentations to colleagues or speeches to a room full of near strangers, we all want to shine...or at least get through it with our dignity intact. Luckily Philip Collins, former Chief Speech Writer to Tony Blair, knows exactly what's needed to give a storming speech. The secret, according to Philip, is content. Too many of us focus on how we're presenting, and don't spend enough time thinking about what we're presenting. The secret to memorable, polished speeches is to think more about the material you're sharing – to pay attention to detail and choose your words carefully.

The Art of Public Speaking Dale Carnegiey There is a strange sensation often experienced in the presence of an audience. It may proceed from the gaze of the many eyes that turn upon the speaker, especially if he permits himself to steadily return that gaze. Most speakers have been conscious of this in a nameless thrill, a real something, pervading the atmosphere, tangible, evanescent, indescribable. All writers have borne testimony to the power of a speaker's eye in impressing an audience. This influence which we are now considering is the reverse of that picture-the power their eyes may exert upon him, especially before he begins to speak: after the inward fires of oratory are fanned into flame the eyes of the audience lose all terror.-William Pittenger, Extempore Speech. Students of public speaking continually ask, "How can I overcome self-consciousness and the fear that paralyzes me before an audience?" Did you ever notice in looking from a train window that some horses feed near the track and never even pause to look up at the thundering cars, while just ahead at the next railroad crossing a farmer's wife will be nervously trying to quiet her scared horse as the train goes by? Words conquer the minds of people if presented in a way that ignites their senses. Just as any other art form such as dance, music etc, even Public Speaking is a skill that needs practice to sharpen the ease with which the speech is rendered. It is the art of public speaking that has made the ruthless, heartless, strong headed Hitler, a leader, it is the art of public speaking that leads to the rise and fall of governments. If it was not public speaking, Shakespeare would have had very little to write about in his masterpiece, 'Julius Caesar', if it was not public speaking, the world would never have had a leader. The book 'The Art of Public Speaking' is an attempt to present public speaking as an art form that needs an equal owing to traditional incredibility and cultural tourism just as any other art form would contribute as such. Providing the guidelines for effective Public Speaking, the book underlines three great speeches, but not as great as when they were spoken. This book is an effective tool to understand the art of Public Speaking and can be a useful platform to learn public speaking, as one can be a good speaker only if he/she is a good reader.

The efficiency of a book is like that of a man, in one important respect: its attitude toward its subject is the first source of its power. A book may be full of good ideas well expressed, but if its writer views his subject from the wrong angle even his excellent advice may prove to be ineffective. This book stands or falls by its authors' attitude toward its subject. If the best way to teach oneself or others to speak effectively in public is to fill the mind with rules, and to set up fixed standards for the interpretation of thought, the utterance of language, the making of gestures, and all the rest, then this book will be limited in value to such stray ideas throughout its pages as may prove helpful to the reader-as an effort to enforce a group of principles it must be reckoned a failure, because it is then untrue. It is of some importance, therefore, to those who take up this volume with open mind that they should see clearly at the out-start what is the thought that at once underlies and is builded through this structure. In plain words it is this: Training in public speaking is not a matter of externals-primarily; it is not a matter of imitation-fundamentally; it is not a matter of conformity to standards-at all. Public speaking is public utterance, public issuance, of the man himself; therefore the first thing both in time and in importance is that the man should be and think and feel things that are worthy of being given forth. Unless there be something of value within, no tricks of training can ever make of the talker anything more than a machine-albeit a highly perfected machine-for the delivery of other men's goods. So self-development is fundamental in our plan. [...]

Excerpt from The Book of Public Speaking, Vol. 1 The art of public speaking is one thing - eloquence is another. Often one hears successful examples of the former far removed from the latter. The mere ability to speak fluently is not uncommon, but far more important than the mere flow of language is the power of putting forward convincingly the views and Opinions which the speaker desires to impart. When to that ability is added the gift of polished and fluent diction, the added attraction of real eloquence, then one has the orator, although there are singularly few in the present age who can truthfully lay claim to that distinction. By the very nature of things real eloquence must be a diminishing quantity, and the dominating factor driving to that end is the growing cult of unemotionalism broadening wide Spread down through the Universities and Public Schools to the great middle-class. A veteran journalist discovers an ancient system of speech techniques for overcoming the fear of public speaking—and reveals how they can profoundly change our lives. In 2010, award-winning journalist John Bove learned that his cousin Bill, a longtime extreme recluse living in his parents' basement, had, at the age of fifty-nine, overcome a lifetime of shyness and isolation—and gotten happily married. Bill credited his turnaround to Toastmasters, the world's largest organization devoted to teaching the art of public speaking. Fascinated by the possibility that speech training could foster the kind of psychological well-being more commonly sought through psychiatric treatment, and intrigued by the notion that words can serve as medicine, Bove set out to discover the origins of speech training—and to learn for himself how to speak better in public. From the birth of democracy in Ancient Greece until two centuries ago, education meant, in addition to reading and writing, years of learning specific, easily taught language techniques for interacting with others. Nowadays, absent such education, the average American speaks 16,000 to 20,000 words every day, but 74 percent of us suffer from speech anxiety. As he joins Toastmasters and learns, step-by-step, to successfully overcome his own speech anxiety, Bowe muses upon our record levels of loneliness, social isolation, and political divisiveness. What would it mean for Americans to learn once again the simple art of talking to one another? Bowe shows that learning to speak in public means more than giving a decent speech without nervousness (or a total meltdown). Learning to connect with others bestows upon us an enhanced sense of freedom, power, and belonging.

So self-development is fundamental in our plan. The second principle lies close to the first: The man must enthrone his will to rule over his thought, his feelings, and all his physical powers, so that the outer self may give perfect, unhampered expression to the inner. It is futile, we assert, to lay down systems of rules for voice culture, intonation, gesture, and what not, unless these two principles of having something to say and making the will sovereign have at least begun to make themselves felt in the life.

Public speaking has become an important aspect of almost every job these days. You may have to make a presentation in front of your colleagues or your clients. You may have to teach important aspects of a subject to a student audience. Or you just may have to make a speech on a social occasion. Whatever the occasion and the scenario, the fact remains - we all have to master the art of public speaking. It is quite possible that you are a novice who just wants to make a good impression on the audience while making your first presentation or speech. It is also possible that you are so scared of standing up in front of an audience, facing them, and then make a presentation. On the other hand, it is also possible that you have given a public speech in the past, but failed miserably (at least you think so). Whatever the situation, the fact is that you need some excellent guidance on how you can actually prepare for a presentation and make a good impression on your audience. It doesn't matter whether your audience is a small group of trainees or a very important client. This is where this guide can help you out. The guide will help you understand the important aspects of public speaking, things you should consider while preparing your speech or presentation, what you can use to make an indelible impression on the audience, and if you have a fear of going up on a stage, how you can overcome this phobia. So, let's get started and become a master public speaker.

Overall, I enjoyed reading the book and I recommend it to anyone in any field that has a fear of speaking in front of crowds. This book guides you through the challenges and solutions of many people in an easy-to-read format. There is even quite a bit of humor to ease the process. After reading this book I am passing it along to my husband who does quite a bit of public speaking for work. I really think this book will help him improve and refine his skills. I received this book for free for the purpose of a review.
