US psychologist Abraham Maslow's A Theory of Human Motivation is a classic of psychological research that helped change the field for good. Like many field-changing thinkers, Maslow was not just a talented researcher, he was also a creative thinker - able to see things from a new perspective and show them in a different light. At a time when psychology was dominated by two major schools of thought, Maslow was able to forge a new, third paradigm, that remains influential today. Sigmund Freud's psychoanalysis had developed the idea of understanding the mind through dialogue between patient and analyst. The behaviorism of Ivan Pavlov and John Watson had focused on comprehending the mind through behaviors that could be measured, trained, and changed. Maslow, however, generated new ideas, forging what he called "positive" or "humanistic psychology." His argument was that humans are psychologically motivated by a series of hierarchical needs, starting with the most essential first. Maslow thought it important for the advancement of psychology to identify, group and rank these needs in terms of priority. His belief in the value of this third way was important in leading those who studied psychology to redefine the discipline, and so see it in new ways.

The primary point of this book is to establish that every couple has some common needs that must be met in order for a marriage to be successful. Those needs usually present themselves in a hierarchy format. Topics: hierarchy of needs, communication, functional needs, money matters, parenting, common-sense marriage, and marriage preparation. What do you need the most in life? Is it knowledge and continuous development? Is it to have the best for you and your loved ones or the best for the entire world? Is it to watch TV? Your needs determine your life consistently, while they control everything that you think and do. Because everything common, necessary, unique, delightful, or original in life you do in order to fulfill your needs. Yet your needs might not regard you always, as you expect. Study your life through your needs now, to realize that you do not live your life on your own behalf, but you live it on behalf of your cells. Because your entire activity is meant to tend to your cells in every manner, and nothing else. Your eating activity is an example, since you eat in order to feed your cells, always. It is the same with thirst, security, breathing, recovery, and reproduction: you fulfill these in order to tend to your cells, and even to keep their genetic material in the world long after you die. Yet there is still more to your needs and life to study and understand. You live your life on behalf of your cells, body, and subconscious mind, through your lower-level needs. While you live your life on behalf of your family, community, nation, society, and the entire world, through the fulfillment of your needs of higher levels and higher classes. Because people expect you to fulfill some of their needs too, while they also fulfill yours. Study yourself now, to find your lifelong activity filled with a multitude of needs, all being more or less important, harder or easier to fulfill, higher or lower in nature, addressing higher classes of life or only yourself, with all being fulfilled many times simultaneously. Throughout this book, we seek to understand the human needs, to make order in this entirety, to classify and model them accurately, and to find all hierarchies and harmonies of needs, in order to help you understand the good from the bad among everything that you do in life, in order to be able to distinguish the necessary from the casual and the irrelevant, and in order to find a clear meaning in life and in the world, for you and for everybody else.

This essay sheds light on the tiers of Maslow's hierarchy of needs and elucidates how Maslow's hierarchy of needs theory is relevant to the workplace environment. Additionally, how Maslow's hierarchy of needs can affect an individual's life is delineated in this essay. "Abraham Maslow developed a model in which basic, low-level needs such as physiological requirements and safety must be satisfied before higher-level needs such as self-fulfillment are pursued. In this hierarchical model, when a need is mostly satisfied it no longer motivates and the next higher need takes its place. For instance, physiological needs are those required to sustain life, such as air, water, nourishment, and sleep. Once physiological needs are met, one's attention turns to safety and security in order to be free from the threat of physical and emotional harm. Such needs might be fulfilled by living in a safe area, having medical insurance, having job security, and by having financial reserves. Once a person has met the lower level physiological and safety needs, higher level needs become important, the first of which are social needs" ("Maslow's hierarchy of," n.d.). Maslow's hierarchy of needs theory is relevant to the workplace environment since it identifies the needs that give employees the motivation, drive, and impetus to work, such as being able to satisfy psychological needs and safety needs.

Furthermore, Maslow's hierarchy of needs theory impacts employees in the organizational environment since it identifies needs that every employee may be striving to fulfill depending upon their position on the hierarchy. Managers can take note of these covetable needs employees seek to fulfill and subsequently leverage that knowledge to turn the subordinate's job into an opportunity to help them satisfy those needs, such as by providing them with substantially more revenue so that employees can afford to meet their physiological needs. For instance, managers can entice employees that have safety needs to work harder and more productivity by "providing them with housing, medical insurance, and other job benefits" ("Maslow's hierarchy of," n.d.). Maslow's hierarchy of needs can play a pivotal role in each individual's life since every individual has needs on the hierarchy that must be fulfilled which ultimately has bearing on influencing his or her decisions and life style choices. Ultimately, sorting employees into various tiers within Maslow's hierarchy of needs can potentially be a viable method for managers to leverage in order to ascertain how to best motivate and rewards individual employees by knowing what needs each individual employee currently prioritizes striving to fulfill.

A guide to theory and practice in key areas of leisure management and planning in the leisure industries, for undergraduates, HND students, and those on post-experience and postgraduate courses.

This is the first in a series of volumes concerned with research encompassed by the rather broad term "environment and behavior." The goal of the series is to begin the process of integration of knowledge on environmental and behavioral topics so that researchers and professionals can have material from diverse sources accessible in a single publication. The field of environment and behavior is broad and interdisciplinary, with researchers drawn from a variety of traditional disciplines such as psychology, sociology, anthropology, geography, and other social and behavioral sciences, and from the biological and life sciences of medicine, psychiatry, biology, and ethology. The interdisciplinary quality of the field is also reflected in the extensive involvement of environmental professionals from architecture, urban planning, landscape architecture, interior design, and other fields such as recreation and natural resources, to name just a few. At present, the field has a somewhat chaotic flavor, with research being carried out by a variety of scholars who publish in a multitude of outlets. Many researchers and practitioners are unaware of the state of knowledge regarding a specific topic because of the unavailability of integrated reference materials. There are only a handful of books dealing with environment and behavior, most of them unintegrated collections of readings, with only an occasional systematic analysis of some facet of the field.

This book results from a symposium organized by Genesys Network, which took place on April 29th, 2015, in Louvain-la-Neuve, Belgium. The organizers invited contributors to think about the concept of power in the context of the evolving international system, and what it implied for the study of the concept in IR academic field. Indeed, if the end of the Cold War was characterized by a "unipolar moment" as defined by Krauthammer in 1991, this period is starting to come to an end. While the United States remains arguably a global superpower, its position is more and more disputed by other actors. Likewise, new centers of power have emerged. Today's world is complex and transitional, characterized by both short- and long-term challenges; interactions among these powers remain to be apprehended and understood. In the last decade, we have also observed an economic and partially political shift or redistribution of power from the "West to the Rest" on the classical state power chessboard. The beginning of the 21st century thus constitutes an important challenge for the super- and emerging or resurgent powers. The new global state of affairs is characterized by conditions that are more complex than in the past. In these circumstances and in the face of these worldwide trends, the concept of power has evolved and the need to redefine or think the concept has become a necessity. The present book thus aims at presenting the diversity of views on the concept of power but also, perhaps more importantly, their complementarity.

The concept of human security is a new approach to security that focuses on the individual human being and provides policy alternatives to the traditional state-centred view, which considers the state to be the only and ultimate referent of security. Formally introduced into the United Nations system in 1994 the concept's intellectual roots draw from international humanitarian law, human rights and human development, and since its introduction human security has been progressively integrated into the international security discourse.

Mainstreaming Human Security: Policies, Problems, Potential paints a comprehensive picture of the relevance of the concept of human security in practice in a time of changing security paradigms and a challenging international environment. This volume looks at the practical implications of mainstreaming human security. It focuses on the potential, problems and policies of human security in peace operations and crisis management operations of the United Nations and of the European Union. Topics addressed by the contributors include mainstreaming human rights and human security in peace and crisis management in general and the role of human security in the EU's Common Security and Defence Policy, security sector reform, restorative responses to human rights violations by peacemakers, human security in Serbia and in African peace operations as well as proposals for human security training. The contributions to the book focus equally on mainstreaming human security in the UN and in the EU context. The global issues discussed and conclusions drawn are of relevance for the future of security addressed by peace and crisis management operations all over the world.

One of the many interesting things Maslow noticed while he worked with monkeys early in his career was that some needs take precedence over others. For example, if you are hungry and thirsty, you will tend to try to take care of the thirst first. After all, you can do without food for weeks, but you can only do without water for a couple of days! Thirst is a "stronger" need than hunger. Likewise, if you are very very thirsty, but someone has put a choke hold on you and you can't breathe, which is more important? The need to breathe, of course. On the other hand, sex is less powerful than any of these. Let's face it, you won't die if you don't get it! Maslow's hierarchy of needs is a motivational theory in psychology comprising a five-tier model of human needs, often depicted as hierarchical levels within a pyramid. In 2005, the wealthiest 20% of the world accounted for 76.6% of total private consumption. The poorest fifth just 1.5%. If the Governments in Association with Industry Leaders/Owners manage the wealth and Natural Resources around the world, then who is responsible of keeping the 80% of the Population dying of starvation and diseases on the two basic stages of the Maslow Pyramid of Needs? NOTE: The profits from this book (if any), will help to support people struggling on the first Stage of the Pyramid of Needs in my country, giving them the main tools to survive and try to claim stages, in the middle of the XXI Century Venezuelan Humanitarian Crisis created by Humans decided to stay in power despite death, suffering of other Humans and by the means of destroying Earth to sale Oil and Minerals to guarantee their Pyramid Pinnacle forever...

Is the world facing a serious threat to the protection of constitutional democracy? There is a genuine debate about the meaning of the various political events that have, for many scholars and observers, generated a feeling of deep foreboding about our collective futures all over the world. Do these events represent simply the normal ebb and flow of political possibilities, or do they instead portend a more permanent move away from constitutional democracy that had been thought triumphant after the demise of the Soviet Union in 1989? Constitutional Democracy in Crisis? addresses these questions head-on: Are the forces weakening constitutional democracy around the world general or nation-specific? Why have some major democracies seemingly not experienced these problems? How can we as scholars and citizens think clearly about the ideas of "constitutional crisis" or "constitutional degeneration"? What are the impacts of forces such as globalization, immigration, income inequality, populism, nationalism, religious sectarianism? Bringing together leading scholars to engage critically with the crises facing constitutional democracies in the 21st century, these essays diagnose the causes of the present afflictions in regimes, regions, and across the globe, believing at this stage that diagnosis is of central importance - as Abraham Lincoln said in his "House Divided" speech, "If we could first know where we are, and whither we are tending, we could then better judge what to do, and how to do it."
